COVID-19 PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCY TO END ON MAY 11, 2023

On January 30, 2023, the Biden administration announced it would end the COVID-19 public health emergency declarations on May 11, 2023. The availability, access, and costs of COVID-19 vaccines and boosters are determined by the federal supply of purchased vaccines, not the public health emergency, so as long as federally purchased vaccines last, COVID-19 vaccines and boosters will remain free and accessible to all people, regardless of insurance coverage. As the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA)'s emergency use authorizations for COVID-19 vaccines, treatments, and tests are tied to a separate emergency declaration, they will remain in effect until otherwise specified. However, at-home or over-the-counter COVID-19 tests may become more costly for people with insurance. After the May 11, 2023 end date, people with traditional Medicare will no longer receive free, at-home tests. For those on Medicaid, at-home tests will be covered at no cost through September 2024. Those who do not have health insurance may still be able to find tests at free clinics, community health centers, public health departments, Tribal health departments, libraries, or other local organizations. People with public insurance coverage, as well as Medicare beneficiaries, may start to face new cost-sharing for pharmaceutical COVID-19 treatments after the May 11, 2023 end date. Medicaid and CHIP programs will continue to cover all pharmaceutical treatments with no-cost sharing through September 2023. Additionally, any pharmaceutical treatments purchased by the federal government (such as Paxlovid), will still be free to all, regardless of insurance coverage. Like the vaccines, this is based on the availability of the federal supply. Access the official statement here and a more detailed list of policies affected can be found here.
